

Client Relationship Summary

Customer-facing relationship and service overview

Important: This document helps clients understand how the Aether Capital Markets platform works, the services available through it, client responsibilities, and useful questions to ask. It does not claim that Aether is a U.S. SEC-registered broker-dealer or investment adviser unless that regulatory status has independently been obtained and verified.

What services can Aether Capital Markets provide?

Aether Capital Markets provides a digital investment workspace where clients can view their account, add or withdraw funds through enabled payment methods, review available market instruments, request allocations to supported investments, monitor approved holdings, and contact customer support. Supported instruments shown by the platform may include individual stocks and exchange-traded funds (ETFs), subject to availability and administrative approval.

Funding options may include crypto deposits, PayPal and international bank transfer when enabled. Payment instructions, wallet addresses, account details, minimums and other requirements are displayed in the platform and may change as the service is updated.

Unless Aether has entered into a separate written arrangement with a client, clients should not assume that the platform continuously monitors their personal financial circumstances or guarantees that a particular investment is suitable for them. Investment values can rise or fall and returns are not guaranteed.

CONVERSATION STARTERS - What products can I access? How are allocation requests reviewed? What happens after I submit an investment request?

How does the investment and allocation process work?

Clients choose an available asset and an amount they wish to invest. The platform may calculate an estimated share quantity using the current platform quote. A submitted allocation can remain pending until it is reviewed and approved. Once approved, the holding can appear in the client's portfolio and its displayed value may change with the platform's current quote.

A pending request is not the same as a completed investment. Clients should review the asset, amount, status and applicable instructions before submitting a request and use the Portfolio and Activity areas to follow their account.

What fees and costs may apply?

Fees and costs depend on the services, payment methods, investments and arrangements actually offered to the client. Third-party payment providers, banks, blockchain networks, investment products or other providers may impose their own charges. Any Aether-specific fees should be disclosed in connection with the relevant service.

Fees and costs can reduce investment returns. Clients should ask for the current fee schedule and understand any funding, withdrawal, transaction, product or service charges before proceeding.

CONVERSATION STARTER - If I invest a specific amount, what fees or costs apply and how much will actually be allocated?

Conflicts, incentives and client interests

A financial platform can have commercial incentives connected with products, services or payment methods it makes available. For example, a business may earn revenue from service charges, administrative fees, spreads, referral arrangements or other commercial relationships. Where a material conflict applies to a client's transaction or service, it should be disclosed clearly enough for the client to understand it.

Clients should not interpret the availability or prominence of an asset on the platform as a guarantee of performance. Aether should communicate material conflicts and should not describe an investment as risk-free unless that description is accurate and legally supportable.

CONVERSATION STARTER - Does Aether receive compensation or have another incentive connected with this product or service?

Funding, withdrawals and account security

Clients should use only funding instructions displayed inside their authenticated Aether account. For crypto, verify both the asset and network before sending. For PayPal or bank transfers, verify the displayed recipient details and instructions. Transactions may require manual review before the account balance is credited or funds are released.

Clients are responsible for protecting login credentials, checking transaction details and promptly reporting suspicious activity or information they believe is incorrect. Crypto transfers can be irreversible, and sending an asset to an incompatible address or network can result in permanent loss.

Investment risk

Investing involves risk, including possible loss of principal. Stocks and ETFs can decline in value, market prices can move quickly, and displayed historical or current performance does not guarantee future results. Clients should consider their objectives, financial circumstances, time horizon and ability to bear loss before investing.

Customer support and relationship questions

Clients can use the Support area of the Aether platform for questions about their account, funding instructions, allocation status, withdrawals or other service matters. Clients should keep copies of relevant confirmations and transaction references.

USEFUL QUESTIONS - Who is my primary point of contact? Who reviews my allocation or withdrawal request? What risks apply? What fees apply? How can I raise a complaint or concern?

Additional information

This summary is a plain-language customer relationship document for the Aether Capital Markets platform. It does not replace account agreements, product disclosures, risk disclosures, privacy terms, fee schedules or legally required regulatory documents. If Aether operates through or with a regulated broker, investment adviser, custodian or other financial institution, that entity's official disclosures should also be provided to clients.

Aether Capital Markets

Client Relationship Summary

Version 1.0 - August 2026

For account-specific questions, use the Support section inside your Aether account.